

A show of hands rates The Bee Gees tops

A convincing display from Vince on guitar

A soulful Robin sings Massachusetts

Maurice, with frills on!

The day The Bee Gees come to your town is a fabulous, fantastic, unforgettable one if you happen to be one of The Bee Gees' uncountable number of fans. If you saw The Bee Gees on their recent tour, here's a souvenir for you, which we hope you enjoy. And if you were lucky enough to see them this time, we hope these pictures will give you a taste of what happens when The Bee Gees come to your town for an evening.

BY JUNE SOUTHWORTH

THEY come by land, sea and air (well, sometimes!) and for an evening The Bee Gees are yours. They may not come into your home, and they may not even have seen the street where you live, but you're the host for the evening just as surely as if you had all The Bee Gees sitting around your table.

When they come into your town, they often see it through car windows between a flurry of faces and waving arms, and when they reach the theatre they never quite know what to expect—even though you may know every inch of that theatre. So you really are at home to them.

It's when they step into the spotlight for the first time that The Bee Gees

meet you. At first all they can see is a dark moving mass, but after the first few minutes they can pick out a face here and there, and if the place is right, they might even put on the house lights so that you can see all.

They know by your screams, by your excitement,

by the names you call.

And if you've left a letter at the theatre for them, they've probably

read it and are thinking

of you, wondering whether you're sitting and if you're

the one who's screaming

their names louder than

everyone else.

The Bee Gees may

have brought a big

orchestra with them,

they did on their tour.

They may even bring

an R.A.F. band to add

excitement. It's all for

you. All the fuss, the bother, the hour of hard work. And when you love them, it's

worth it.

It's when they step into

the spotlight for the first

time that The Bee Gees

meet you. At first all they

can see is a dark moving

mass, but after the first few minutes they can pick

out a face here and there,

and if the place is right,

they might even put on the house lights so that you can see all.

They know by your

screams, by your excitement,

by the names you call.

And if you've left a

letter at the theatre for

them, they've probably

read it and are thinking

of you, wondering whether

you're sitting and if you're

the one who's screaming

their names louder than

everyone else.

The Bee Gees may

have brought a big

orchestra with them,

they did on their tour.

They may even bring

an R.A.F. band to add

excitement. It's all for

you. All the fuss, the

bother, the hour of

hard work. And when

you love them, it's

worth it.

It's when they step into

the spotlight for the first

time that The Bee Gees

meet you. At first all they

can see is a dark moving

mass, but after the first

few minutes they can pick

out a face here and there,

and if the place is right,

they might even put on

the house lights so that

you can see all.

They know by your

screams, by your excitement,

by the names you call.

And if you've left a

letter at the theatre for

them, they've probably

read it and are thinking

of you, wondering whether

you're sitting and if you're

the one who's screaming

their names louder than

everyone else.

The Bee Gees may

have brought a big

orchestra with them,

they did on their tour.

They may even bring

an R.A.F. band to add

excitement. It's all for

you. All the fuss, the

bother, the hour of

hard work. And when

you love them, it's

worth it.

It's when they step into

the spotlight for the first

time that The Bee Gees

meet you. At first all they

can see is a dark moving

mass, but after the first

few minutes they can pick

out a face here and there,

and if the place is right,

they might even put on

the house lights so that

you can see all.

They know by your

screams, by your excitement,

by the names you call.

And if you've left a

letter at the theatre for

them, they've probably

read it and are thinking

of you, wondering whether

you're sitting and if you're

the one who's screaming

their names louder than

everyone else.

The Bee Gees may

have brought a big

orchestra with them,

they did on their tour.

They may even bring

an R.A.F. band to add

excitement. It's all for

you. All the fuss, the

bother, the hour of

hard work. And when

you love them, it's

worth it.

It's when they step into

the spotlight for the first

time that The Bee Gees

meet you. At first all they

can see is a dark moving

mass, but after the first

few minutes they can pick

out a face here and there,

and if the place is right,

they might even put on

the house lights so that

you can see all.

They know by your

screams, by your excitement,

by the names you call.

And if you've left a

letter at the theatre for

them, they've probably

read it and are thinking

of you, wondering whether

you're sitting and if you're

the one who's screaming

their names louder than

everyone else.

The Bee Gees may

have brought a big

orchestra with them,

they did on their tour.

They may even bring

an R.A.F. band to add

excitement. It's all for

you. All the fuss, the